Abundant Energy

While her son, the President, may get cold comfort wrestling with burning issues, "Miz Lillian" Carter gets warm comfort from her new, Irish cast-iron woodburning Reginald stove.

Known for her own abundant energy, Miz Lillian's stove may help conserve more scarce forms of energy.

Pictured with Miz Lillian at her Plains, Georgia home is Tony Kelly, who presented her with the stove on behalf of its makers, Waterford Ironfounders Limited, and explained how to keep the down home fires burning. Now on sale in the U.S., the stove is only one of many hot new Irish products expected to be introduced in the U.S. by the end of 1979, according to the Irish Export Board's North American office in New York.

Edwin Barron, 54, Dies; Runner Who Organized Annual Hains Point Race

Editor's Note: The following is a story printed in THE WASHINGTON POST, January 19, 1979. As Eddie Barron was well in known in the Appomattox area, we feel that this article will be of interest and could be inspirational to others who have shared the same or similar health problems. By the time of his death Tuesday of last week, Ed Barron had organized so many running events, participated in so many road races and shared his spacious enthusiasm for track and field with so many friends and strangers that he had been justly known for some time as the father of Washington-area running.)

By Colman McCarthy
Washington Post Staff Writer

Edwin S. Barron, 54, an official of the Amateur Athletic Union and a luminary among Washington-area runners, died of cancer Tuesday, January 16, 1979, in Fairfax Hospital.

As both a runner and an official, Mr. Barron earned a reputation as the guiding spirit of the local running community as it grew in the 1970s. As a founder in 1972 of the Potomac Valley Seniors Track Club, he conducted hundreds of races for every type of runner.

The race that most caught the public's fancy was the annual 10 kilometer run around Hains Point on the morning of New Year's Day. In appreciation of Mr. Barron's service to runners, organizers of this year's event renamed it the Ed Barron Hangover Classic. In 1978, 280 runners turned out, but this year the number soared to 650.

In his professional life, Mr. Barron, a consultant to the Central Intelligence Agency, was an expert in agricultural economics. He advised the agency on foreign agricultural developments and their impacts on U. S. foreign policy.

Mr. Barron, who was born in Norfolk, Virginia served with the Army Air Corps in Europe in World War II. He graduated from the College of William and Mary in 1949, and served in the U. S. Naval Reserve, from which he retired in 1971 as a lieutenant commander.

As an athlete, Mr. Barron came into his own in an extraordinary way. When he began suffering the pains of colitis in his mid-30's, he took up jogging a mile or so a day. He increased his distance slowly. Although he eventually underwent five major operations for ulcerative colitis and cancer of the colon, he remained faithful to his personal fitness program.

At age 52, he ran in three 26.2 mile races, including a highly respectable 3 hours and 21 minute finish in the 1976 Marine Corps Marathon. That qualified him for the legendary Boston Marathon, but a trip to Southeast Asia for the CIA canceled his entry.

Despite having had a colostomy operation, Mr. Barron refused to sit on the sidelines and watch life pass by.

"I owe my life to running," he told an interviewer. "In cases like mine for people over 40, the mortality rate is extremely high. The surgeons said there was no doubt that my overall conditioning pulled me through."

Mr. Barron, on the board of governors of the AAU as well as being a past secretary-treasurer of the National AAU Masters Long-Distance Running Committee, organized the developmental track meets at Yorktown High School in Arlington.

These were popular family affairs that included runs for children just out of diapers as well as their grandparents. An occasional participant was Sen. Alan Cranston (D-Calif). Several years ago, he called Mr. Barron "a terrific man. And he still nips me at 100 yards."

Edwin Barron is shown running along a road in Arlington - for years this was an everyday habit for him.

He is survived by his wife, Mary LaFerne Doss Barron, formerly of Appomattox, and daughter of Mrs. Lougenia P. Doss and the late G. Lewis Doss; a daughter, Linda Campbell of Falls Church; two sons, Mark and Steven of Arlington; and his mother, Mrs. Rose L. Barron of Norfolk.

The family suggests that expressions of sympathy be in the form of contributions to the American Cancer Society.

HELPING SAVE A LOT OF FUEL are the makers and buyers of energy-economical new trucks and buses.

All of these fuel savings lead to cost savings for companies that ship goods by truck, and that can mean savings for consumers. These voluntary fuel-saving efforts are serving the public not only by conserving fuel but by helping the fight against inflation.

It would appear that the Voluntary Program is working where Americans work best—in the free marketplace.

Mr. Adduci is president of the Motor Vehicle Manufacturer's Association.

Let's Ask The Experts!

By V. J. Adduci

When it comes to saving energy, the people in America's truck and bus industries really appear to be experts. Since 1973, they've instituted voluntary efforts that have saved this country some 1.7 billion gallons of fuel, including 846 million gallons just in 1977, and they're saving fuel at a steeply increasing rate.

Adduci

Organized in cooperation with the U.S. Department of Transportation, the Voluntary Truck and Bus Fuel Economy Improvement Program has identified a number of ways to save, since not all methods and devices work on all types of trucks or buses.

Some 423 million gallons of fuel have been saved in the past five years by adopting radial-ply tires. Radials save by absorbing less energy, which translates directly into fuel savings.

Millions more gallons have been saved by adopting diesels instead of gasoline engines for many short-haul delivery trucks. A number of participants in the Department of Transportation sponsored Voluntary Program have reported twice the miles per gallon.

...that our unemployment rate is nearly eight percent of the work force and almost twice what it was in 1965.

...that helping to keep the rate from rising as much as it might is careful government regulation of the trucking industry, protecting jobs and helping the many family-owned trucking businesses stay in business.

Frustrations Of A Rural Carrier

Author Unknown

I'm Uncle Sam's favorite pet
I'm harty and I'm hale,
I've nothing in the world to do,
But glide around with the mail,
But one thing breaks my heart
And my nervous system shocks,
It's the everlasting pennies
That I'm fishing from the box.
I carry stamps and envelopes
And postal cards and such,
And I would like to sell a few
It would please me very much,
But one can't sell unless you buy,
No matter how he talks,
So I have to keep on diving
After pennies in a box.
And now quite confidentially
I'll tell you something more,
A Rural Carrier way out west
Forgot himself and swore,
Says he "I can stand the drifts
I can stand the frozen locks,
But blast the bloomen pennies
In the blasted measly box.
It's all right in the spring time
Or when the summer breezes blow,
But a different proposition
When its 32 below.
When all your fingers and your toes
Are frozen hard as rocks,
It's almost anything but funny
Fishing pennies from a box.
When the roll is called up yonder
And all shall gather there,
They wouldn't let the mailman in
If they knew he'd learned to swear,
If you want St. Peter to open up the gate
When the Rural Carrier knocks,
Buy stamps and don't be guilty
Of putting pennies in the box.

Chimney Safety

BLACKSBURG - The horror of a home fire caused by problems in a chimney can be avoided if proper precautions are taken.

The use of wood-burning stoves is growing, creating a problem of possible buildup of creosote and soot in the stove pipe and chimney - - one of the causes of chimney fires.

"Burn only well-seasoned hardwood which has been dried at least six months. Seasoned wood produces less creosote and provides more usable heat, reminded Virginia Tech Extension specialist Eldridge R. Collins, Jr.

Soft woods have a high resin content which can cause heavy creosote build up.

Do not burn green wood since it also can create creosote problems Collins warned.

And, do not burn wood that is not dry. Burning wood that still has some moisture is a new hazard in the "airtight" woodburning stoves, Collins explained.

The newer "airtight" stoves make it possible to have a lower, slower-burning fire for a long period of time. The moisture, condensing out of the wood and combining with gaseous material, converts to creosote. Because the fire is lower, the temperature of the flue does not get very high. Lower flue temperatures are conducive to more creosote building up, Collins said.

If the weather remains relatively mild, the stove is running in this lower fire condition a long time. When a colder spell comes, a hotter fire is built, the heat from which can set the flue on fire.

Collins added that this condition also happens when the wood-burning stove has the capacity to heat a larger area than where it is located. Because the room is small, the fire is kept lower - - keeping the temperature of the flue down. When a larger fire is built, the risk of a flue fire is greater.

Collins' suggestion for safety where running a stove at a lower fire might be the situation, is to build a hot fire once or twice a day. This will get the flue temperature up and help to burn off the deposits.

"Burn the stove with the damper completely open," Collins said.

"Those who intend to burn wood continuously might plan to clean the chimney each year," the Virginia Tech faculty member continued, describing some of the most effective way to do it.

Seal the front of the fireplace to keep soot and dirt out of the room and use one of the mechanical methods of cleaning. A rope may be used to lower and raise a bunch of tire chains inside the flue. A weighted burlap sack, filled with straw or chicken wire pulled up and down the chimney flue will remove some of the creosote.

Another method of cleaning is to work a small evergreen down the chimney. When the tree is pulled back up some of the creosote and soot will be dislodged, Collins said.

Also there still are firms that offer chimney cleaning services or commercially-available flue cleaning brushes also can be used.

Collins did not recommend chemical chimney cleaners. They are not particularly effective in removing heavy deposits and should be used with caution. However, as a preventive measure, they may have a place.

Study On Profitability Of Agriculture

State Senator Howard Anderson (D-Halifax), chairman, Senate Committee on Agriculture, Conservation and Natural Resources said today that the Virginia Agricultural Opportunities Commission has forwarded their interim report to Governor John Dalton and members of the General Assembly.

Senator Anderson is also chairman of this Commission which was created by Senate Joint Resolution No. 9 and this Commission is studying the basic factors affecting the state's agriculture, including forestry.

The interim report notes that the primary attention of the Commission will be given to the profitability of farming, the impact of state and federal regulations on agriculture, and future opportunities for production and marketing. This report identifies the areas to be studied and the methods for analyzing them. The final report to the Governor and the General Assembly will be predesented next November.

According to Senator Anderson, "the work of this Commission will provide greater opportunities for all farmers in Virginia. Ways must be found to improve the profitability of farming so agriculture can continue to be the Commonwealth's largest industry.

Shyness

Dr. Philip Zimbardo has discovered that shyness wears a variety of faces. Some shy people withdraw from life by avoiding everybody. Some are meek followers who keep their eyes cast down and never have opinions. Others are successful extroverts who secretly suffer from fears of inadequacy and rejection.

There are many shy alcoholics who are too insecure to give up their drinking crutch and too afraid of other people to seek help. And there are a few shy individuals who, like "Son of Sam" murderer, David Berkowitz, explode without warning after years of unendurable loneliness and frustration.

In his NIMH-funded study of "The Social Psychology of Shyness," Zimbardo explains the phenomenon as a "people phobia," a social anxiety which stems from the victim's fear that everyone has negative opinions of him or her. Anxiety leads to nervousness; the nervous shy person is awkward or withdrawn in the company of others, which reinforces feelings that "I don't fit in."

In his studies, Zimbardo found that there are the "publicly shy," whose self-doubts surface to produce awkward behavior, and the "privately shy," whose self-doubts remain submerged behind a relatively calm exterior. The psychologist notes that the privately shy can set aside their fears to concentrate on the job at hand: "The demand to focus outward on a structured, clearly defined task seemed to distract the privately shy from their self-consciousness."

Zimbardo is convinced that shy people can free themselves from their own fears: "... believing shyness to be a learned response style to social stimuli, we think it can be 'unlearned'." He favors "a general, 'problem-solving' attitude toward feared social encounters;" this could be developed with the aid of "homework" exercises like "saying 'hello' to strangers, asking for information or advice . . . making eye contact, starting and ending conversations as well as effectively interrupting . . ."

To avoid making children shy, Zimbardo suggests that parents not exhibit excessive criticism and pressure to succeed. He also feels that there should be a "revolutionary" culture-wide effort to replace competition and self-preoccupation with tenderness, sharing, and "greater trust in the relationship of children to their parents and other authorities."
